The William J. Hughes Center for Public Policy at Richard Stockton College of New Jersey will tackle the tough topic of energy policy Wednesday during a day-long Energy Symposium highlighted by a speech from U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Lisa P. Jackson.

Daniel J. Douglas, Hughes Center director, said the event is an opportunity to discuss a number of critical — but often controversial — energy issues, such as hydraulic fracturing for natural gas, wind and solar energy, and nuclear power. He said it wasn't hard to find speakers with opinions on the matters.

"It was pretty easy," he said. "People are anxious to talk about energy, and particularly the innovations."

The event has a theme of "40/40," a nod to the university's 40th year of existence, and a charge to look
