

not raise capital gain tax rates. While raising the rates may seem popular in the short term, in the long term it is counter-productive for all Americans.

Michael Busler is an Associate Professor and a Fellow at the William J. Hughes center for Public Policy at Richard Stockton College.

ALSO BY MICHAEL BUSLER

Herman Cain's 9-9-9 should be 12-12-0

Labor troubles are a big problem for Atlantic City

Warren Buffett's view seems inconsistent

Taxpayers, the silent majority, are the winners in the debt deal

Christie shows strong leadership on medical marijuana

A change in philosophy is needed to save labor movement

'Chocolate Milk Syndrome' dooming economic policy makers

It's time for a dose of supply-side economics

2011 will be year of government budget battles

Silent majority supports Gov. Christie's budget plans

Do the Republicans have a softer side?

Tax cuts: All for one and one for all

N.J. property tax cap is just the first step

N.J. tax revolt (the silent majority) make a plea to public employees

Pay cuts are not fair but best solution to N.J. budget crisis

Fix N.J. budget mess with 10-70 plan: A 10 percent public worker pay cut and a new retirement age of 70

N.J. public workers just charge too much for their services

Tax revolt: There is no more money for raising New Jersey's taxes

Tax revolt watching New Jersey politicians

Did a national tax revolt start in Wildwood, New Jersey?

Comments (1)

Michael Busler

1. Friday, 20 April 2012 11:08
(Mark Anderson)