

Stockton: Booker leads Lonigan by 11 points

By PolitickerNJ Staff | October 9th, 2013 - 3:50pm

| More

New Jersey's race for U.S. Senate has tightened to within 11 percentage points, with Democrat Cory Booker leading statewide poll released today by the Stockton Polling Institute.

When respondents who say they are voting for or leaning toward voting for either candidate are included, Booker, the while former Bogota Mayor Lonigan received 39 percent. With one week until the Oct. 16 special election, the 11-po respondents who are undecided or refuse to identify who they will vote for. Lonigan is in the position to have to convince Booker.

"Still, 11 points is a healthy lead for Booker with the election coming up next Wednesday," said Daniel J. Douglas, Director of Policy.

The statewide poll was conducted from October 3-8 with 729 likely voters in New Jersey's U.S. Senate election. The margin is 11 points, and is higher among data subsets.

Interviewers calling live from The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey campus called both land lines and cell phones from the Hughes Center.

You May Like

Pelosi Dead-Wrong
On New Law
Money Morning

Pastor Mocked for
His 'Biblical Money
Code,' G...
Moneynews

Top 10 Best
Bedrooms You
Must See
beautifulhomedesigns

30 Fairly Shocking
Pictures of Celebrities With...
CelebrityToob

A Visual Guide to
Multiple Sclerosis
WebMD

Astro
What
Right
Bloom

From Politicker NJ

- Winners and Losers: Week of the shutdown | Politicker NJ
- Who won last night's debate? | Politicker NJ
- The scene in Essex County | Politicker NJ