A conversation with McGahn, hosted by the William J. Hughes Center for Public Policy at Stockton University, will be held in the Stockton Performing Arts Center.

South Jersey native McGahn named 72 times in Mueller report

McGahn has argued presidents' close advisers should be allowed to keep their communications confidential. His case is working its way through federal appeals court.

He is a graduate of Holy Spirit High School in Absecon, and his mother, Noreen, lives in Brigantine.

McGahn has worked as chief counsel for the National Republican Congressional Committee and served on the Federal Election Commission.

He has also served as Trump's presidential campaign counsel, general counsel of the presidential transition team and White House counsel. In the latter role, he managed the judicial selection process, including the nominations of two Supreme Court justices, and coordinated Trump's deregulation efforts.
