Among those with children, 17% had a kitchen so that their children could eat.

“The Hughes Center poll shows that too many people believe that the new coronavirus outbreak will create a food security crisis,” Froomjian said.

The new research by Bolton, a political science major from Hamilton County, aims to document the effect of economic conditions on food security. The study will be published in the journal Food Security. Other researchers include Dr. John Murphy of the University of Tennessee and Dr. John A. Maurer of the University of Tennessee. The research was funded by the Tennessee Department of Health.
