Galloway Twp., NJ – Representatives of the candidates seeking votes in New Jersey's first February primary election will be on hand for a Candidates' Fair at The Richard Stockton College on Tuesday, January 29, 2008 from 1 to 7 p.m. in the Lower J-Wing Gallery.

Sponsored by the College's William J. Hughes Center for Public Policy, this event is free and open to both students and the general public. Campaign representatives from the Democratic and Republican presidential candidates will provide information on positions regarding key campaign issues, answer questions, allow people to sign up as volunteers, and obtain absentee ballots.

A similar fair took place last fall and attracted more than 100 students. "Now that the field of candidates is narrowing and the actual election is approaching, we are offering a second opportunity to meet with the candidate representatives and to open it to the general public as well," said Sharon Schulman, Director of the Hughes Center. "The goal is to spur voting participation by informed students and area residents."
