Galloway Township, NJ- The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey is seeking photo submissions from the public to help illustrate a comprehensive volume on the history of the institution. Photos from the early days of the College are particularly needed.

Dean Robert Gregg of the School of Arts and Humanities and Professor Emeritus – Professor of Literature Kenneth Tomkins, co-editors of the book titled Reaching 40 said that any submissions used would credit the person lending the picture and the photos and/or negatives would be copied and returned.

“Specifically, we are in need of photos of the first College office at #1 Williams Plaza on the Black Horse Pike in Hamilton Twp., and photos from the interior of the former Mayflower Hotel when the College occupied it between September and December of 1971,” Tompkins said.

The Mayflower formerly stood facing the Atlantic City Boardwalk at Tennessee Ave. Classes were taught there while the main campus in Galloway was still under construction. The College moved from the Mayflower to the first phase of campus construction (what is now Alton Auditorium through D-Wing) at the start of the spring semester in January, 1972.

Any submissions for the book are needed by June, 1.
