Stockton Helps Towns Go Green / page 2

This garden is not only helping the township manage its stormwater runoff, it has allowed the township to address parking lot flooding that often made parking spaces unusable in freezing weather. Student teams also conducted an energy audit of the municipal facilities, proposing a set of changes that have allowed the township to save energy and money. Recently, another student team completed a carbon inventory for the township, measuring the greenhouse gas emissions from municipal operations and the township overall to establish a baseline for Galloway's commitment to reduce its greenhouse emissions.

Barbara Fiedler, Galloway Township Director of Community Education, expressed her great satisfaction with the partnership. "Stockton faculty and students have been extremely helpful. It can be difficult to identify and pursue green
