"With the growing demand in children's book production came the strengthened interest in art behind the book. This annual exhibit showcases the original art from the year's best children's books," said Denise McGarvey, who manages the College's Art Gallery.

Celebrating its thirtieth year, the "Original Art" exhibit is not only an opportunity for artists to display their work, but also has become an important event in the New York publishing calendar as a place for art directors and editors seeking new talent and is a favorite destination for school visits. It also attracts local librarians, families and visitors of all ages.

Gold and silver medals are awarded to three chosen books representing a wide variety of mediums and techniques.
