

th anniversary of International Women's Day (IWD).

Each year, on March 8, thousands of events are held across the globe to recognize the accomplishments achieved by women around the world and to inspire other women to set new goals.

The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey's Women's, Gender and Sexuality Studies program will host an event on March 8 to celebrate the advancements in women's rights and feminism. The event, titled "How to Make Feminism Your Own: 10 Years of Manifesting Feminism," will take place in the College's Elizabeth B. Alton Auditorium (A-Wing) at 6:00 p.m.

Authors and activists Jennifer Baumgardner and Amy Richards will discuss what feminism means today, how young women can make feminism a part of their lives and the barriers that still stand. The discussion will also focus on breaking down those barriers.

As of today, interning and Richards was working in Gloria Steinem's office. Steinem is known for her work with the Women's Liberation Movement.

Baumgardner and Richards co-authored Manifesta: Young Women, Feminism, and the Future

International Women's Day/ page 2

Baumgardner was the youngest editor at