Galloway Township, NJ- Audrey Wolfson Latourette, professor of business law at the Richard Stockton College of New Jersey, recently attended the annual conference of the Pacific South West Academy of Legal Studies in Business in Palm Springs, CA.

Latourette presented a research paper at the conference and was elected as an officer of the prestigious organization.

Latourette, who is holder of a J.D. degree and a cum laude graduate of the Temple University School of Law, showcased her research on the legal aspects of academic advising. While at the conference, which attracts faculty members from both from undergraduate institutions and law schools from all over the United States, she was elected secretary/treasurer for 2011-2012. Thus, in 2012-2013 she will be the Vice-President and Conference Chair; and in 2013-2014, she will serve as the President of the group. Some of her other areas of research expertise include copyright law, gender discrimination, plagiarism, First Amendment rights, and college and University Law.

A Stockton faculty member since 1977, Latourette earned her Master of Arts degree from Rowan University with highest honors, and her Bachelor of Arts, Magna Cum Laude from Rutgers University.
